

A facsimile machine detects transition points in image data, and adjusts the image data accordingly. Preferably, the image data are run-length data, from which image margins are detected, and the image data are adjusted to avoid overflow of printing margins. The adjustment may include horizontal repositioning and zooming. In zooming, an offset is preferably added to avoid moire patterns.